

Islam, Human Rights, and Public Policy: A Comprehensive Guide

The relationship between Islam, human rights, and public policy is a complex and ever-evolving one. On the one hand, Islam is a religion that has been practiced for centuries and has a rich history of scholarship and legal thought. On the other hand, human rights are a relatively new concept that has only gained widespread recognition in the past few decades. As a result, there is often a tension between the two, with some arguing that Islam is incompatible with human rights, while others argue that Islam is the foundation of human rights.
